Audit course- Performing art

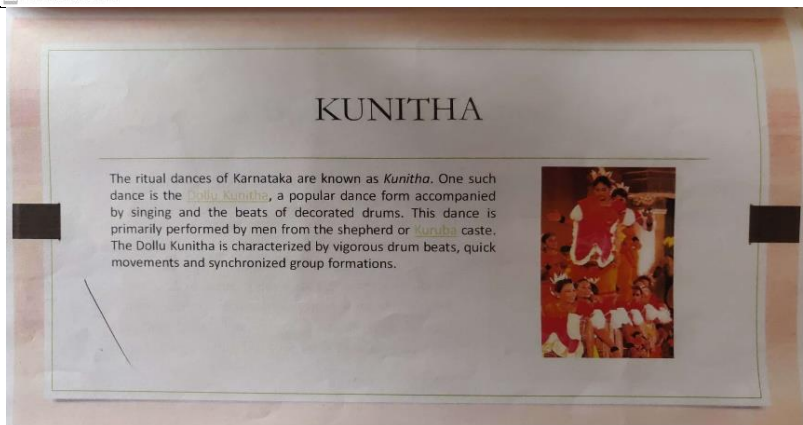

In the course "Performing Art," students are presented with a remarkable opportunity to delve into the rich tapestry of dance forms across various states. Through assignments, students explore dance traditions from different regions, demonstrating the institute's dedication to promoting inclusivity. Each student selects a particular state and immerses themselves in the study of at least five distinct dance forms from that state. By delving into these dance forms, students not only gain insight into artistic expressions but also cultivate an appreciation for the unique artistic elements of different regions.

Bhootha Aradhane

- This dance form is widely performed in coastal regions. The Bhootha Aradhane (Gana) worship includes a procession of idols and is characterized by drums and firecrackers. At the end of the procession, the idols are placed on a plinth. A dancer, personifying a bhoota (holy spirit), dances around the plinth with sword and jingling bells. The dancer dances quickly and then slows, signifying that he is now divine.

Study of "Jaggahalige Kunita" dance form of Karnataka

Jaggahalige Kunita

This is a folk art of the Hubballi Dharwad region (particularly the village of Byahatti), which is performed on occasions such as Ugadi and Holi. The jaggahalige is a percussion instrument made from a bullock cart wheel wrapped in buffalo hide. The villagers roll out the large instruments and march in procession. The performance is directed by a choreographer playing a much-smaller percussion instrument called the kanihalige, made of clay and covered with calf hide. The performance usually involves about 15 people.

The institute's curriculum emphasizes inclusivity and cultural awareness through the annual "Settlement Study." The choice of study locations is guided by the Vision and Mission of Pravara Rural College of Architecture, Loni, ensuring students explore and honor the rich culture and heritage of the local rural areas.

During this study, students immerse themselves in the local communities, interacting with residents, understanding their traditions, and appreciating their cultural nuances. This hands-on experience not only enriches their understanding but also nurtures empathy and respect for diversity.

In Architecture Design I, students engage in a comprehensive examination and analysis of rural settlements. This entails understanding lifestyle dynamics, climate considerations, social structures, and more. By incorporating these elements, the curriculum fosters a holistic understanding of the intricate connections between design and various aspects of life.

Architecture Design II delves deeper into socio-cultural dimensions. Students study the influence of lifestyle, culture, and traditions on architectural design. This approach encourages a profound appreciation for diverse cultural backgrounds and cultivates a sense of unity within architectural creations. Good Governance.

Governance has been defined to refer to structures and processes that are designed to ensure accountability, transparency, responsiveness, rule of law, stability, equity & inclusiveness, empowerment & broad based participation.

When government sticks to these principles while making politics & implementing them, it is said to be good governance.

Meaning of Good Governance:

In 1989, 'concept of Governance' was the 1st time highlighted in World Bank study sub-saharan Africa from Crisis to Sustainable Growth to describe the need for institutional reform & a better & more efficient public sector in Sub-Saharan countries.

For a country like India where democracy forms the base of all the governing systems, governance needs to be inclusive & is largely determined by the participation of its people.

What is Good Governance and meaning of Good Governance

Four key dimensions of

Good Governance

- Public Sector Management
- Accountability
- Legal framework for development
- Information & Transparency.

In a democracy like ours, a system of governance which is accountable & transparent demands the participation of people at every level. People's participation on one hand can help the government formulate better politics which can be communicated to society again through participation & also implemented well with its help.

Good Governance thus has to understood as two way process - govt. should ensure that values of good governance like accountability & transparency are taken care of while framing policies while on other hand, people should participate.

- Characteristics of Good Governance:

- Participation
- Rule of law
- Transparency
- Responsiveness
- Consensus oriented
- Equity & inclusiveness
- Effectiveness & efficiency
- Accountability.

- Government, Governance & Good Governance:

- The word 'Governance' leads itself to wider meaning which includes the processes as well as results, making it more comprehensive in meaning & implications than word government.
- Govt. refers to the machinery & institutional arrangements of political community whereas governance means making policies for development of organisations as well as people.
