Response:

We are proud of the distinctiveness of our institute in its mission of propagating architectural education and architectural awareness in its rural surroundings.

Promotion of architectural education in rural background has become a need of the hour because;

- 1) The phenomenal growth of low scale residential and nonresidential construction in villages is mostly without formal technical supervision. This is not only because of the low availability of architects in rural backgrounds, but it is mainly because of the less awareness about the need for formal technical supervision in the interest of the quality of the building construction. Hence creating good professionals is not the only goal of this college but reaching out the rural population around and creating that awareness is also an important goal.
- 2) The economic upliftment of the rural population is very well possible by creating the opportunity for architectural education for the high school pass outs. This education of architecture and allied courses has the potential of opening gateways of the upscale real estate industry, design industry and other related industries. This is creating a positive socio-economic impact on the rural population.
- 3) The continuously growing housing demand in expanding villages can only be enhanced by creating a plank of skilled technical professionals in the rural population only.

The institution accomplishes its particular priority and thrust by educating students from underprivileged rural backgrounds. Students' success via education is signified by the development of the college. By providing high-quality education, the institution aims to accomplish positive socio-economic transformation. The institution is committed to improve rural awareness by promoting education to a group of students who are high school pass outs. Our career counseling sessions (citation attached) are our public awareness campaign in which we expose collegiate programs, in which we showcase collegiate courses to high school pupils. This encourages rural kids from low-income families to pursue higher education. The advantages of the architecture course are clearly presented to school kids, assisting them in overcoming the uncertainty of selecting the appropriate course based on their interests. The high school students are made to give aptitude tests which help them understand their own inclinations. The practice of boosting our economy through awareness about architecture has a significant impact on the wealth dimension of our society. To do this, the institute also offers allied programs or courses, such as interior designing to school and college students. These kinds of programs foster a love of learning in pupils, which benefits them by providing them with self-employment alternatives. Students are encouraged to work while they learn through earn and learn schemes in order to support themselves and their families financially.
